WELCOME TO
METRO.USSENATE CONFIRMS HASPEL
TO BE CIA DIRECTOR

The Senate confirmed Gina Haspel on Thursday to be director of the CIA, ending a bruising confirmation fight centered on her ties to the spy agency's past use of waterboarding and other brutal interrogation techniques. Haspel, who will be the first woman to lead the CIA, is a 33-year veteran at the agency and currently serving as its acting director. The tally was 54-45 in favor of her nomination in the 100-member chamber, where a simple majority was required for confirmation. Six Democrats joined President Donald Trump's fellow Republicans in voting for Haspel, and two Republicans voted no. Haspel was approved despite stiff opposition over her links to the CIA's use of harsh interrogation methods, including waterboarding, a type of simulated drowning widely considered torture. An undercover officer for most of her CIA career, Haspel in 2002 served as CIA station chief in Thailand, where the agency conducted interrogations at a secret prison using methods including waterboarding. Three years later, she drafted a cable ordering the destruction of videotapes of those interrogations.

NYC MAN'S TIRADE
PROMPTS ONLINE PETITION

Thousands of people have signed an online petition calling for the disbarment of a New York lawyer accused of threatening to have cafe workers deported after he heard them speaking Spanish, an incident caught on video that went viral. The clip, recorded on Tuesday by a customer at Fresh Kitchen in Midtown Manhattan and posted on Facebook, shows a man who appeared to be about 40 years old, with short dark hair and a white dress shirt, growing enraged and loudly complaining to the sandwich shop staff after hearing conversations in Spanish. "Your staff are speaking Spanish to customers when they should be speaking English. It's America!" he shouts in the video, which has garnered more than 5.4 million views. "My guess is they are not documented so my next call is to ICE to ask each of them to get out of my country," he says, referring to the U.S. Department of Homeland Security's Immigration and Customs Enforcement. "I pay for their welfare — the least they can do is speak English," he said. Other customers are heard on the video denouncing what they describe as his racist comments.

TWO DEAD, 43 INJURED IN NJ SCHOOL BUS CRASH

A student and a teacher were killed and 43 others injured on Thursday when a school bus of 5th graders on a field trip collided with a dump truck on a New Jersey highway, officials said. The crash occurred at about 10:20 a.m. in Mount Olive Township in northern New Jersey's Morris County, Gov. Phil Murphy told a news conference. The bus was carrying 38 students and seven adults, including the driver. "Some patients are in critical condition and currently undergoing surgery, so please keep everybody in your prayers," Murphy said.

"There is an awful lot we just don't know," the governor said, adding details of the crash are not being released pending an investigation. The front end of the bus was severed from the vehicle and the body of the bus was separated from its chassis. The dump truck seemed to be intact, images from the crash scene showed. The bus was carrying students from East Brook Middle School in Paramus to Waterloo Village, officials said. "The bus flew off of the wheels, but it hit the metal thing on the side of the highway," fifth-grader Theo Ancevski said.

REPUBLICANS SEE PROGRESS ON IMMIGRATION DEAL

Republicans in Congress who are pushing for action on immigration legislation said on Thursday they were getting closer to an agreement on a bill that President Donald Trump could support. "I think we've had better discussions in the last 48 hours than in the last 48 months," said Representative Mark Meadows, chairman of the hard-right House Freedom Caucus. Meadows was referring to negotiations with both the White House and centrist House Republicans on a bill that would address the future of young immigrants known as "Dreamers" who were brought to the United States illegally when they were children. But Meadows also said details had to be worked out on difficult issues before a bill could be ready for House floor debate. Meadows, Trump and many House conservatives are pushing for tough new controls on immigration that Democrats and some moderate Republicans oppose. Fearing defeat in November elections, conservatives want to demonstrate to their base that they have been pushing forward on Trump's demands to clamp down on immigration.

New York has seen an increase in the number of elderly prisoners, and reformers say there needs to be a change to the criminal justice system. MEESH/FUCKR

Prison reformers call for action as New York state's population of elderly inmates increases

Report: Despite low likelihood of older prisoners to reoffend, release rates are stagnant, adding to financial strain on criminal justice system.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

New York's prison population has been shrinking over the years, but one subset of inmates has seen a surge in numbers, and its prompting prison reform activists to demand action.

Though the prison population has dropped

17 percent over the last decade, the population of older adults in New York prisons has increased 46 percent in that time, according to a report from the Osborne Association, a nonprofit that works with those affected by the criminal justice system.

This is on par with a national trend: According to 2016 Bureau of Justice Statistics data, the number of prisoners 55 or older sentenced to more than a year in state prison had increased 400 percent between 1993 and 2013.

In New York, the association reports, those over 50 have a low rate of reoffense — 82 percent do not return to prison, compared to 57.4 percent of the entire prison population. And yet, the report states, release rates for these older incarcerated individuals remain low.

Older inmates tend to have an array of health issues that cost more in care. New York taxpayers spend between $100,000 and $240,000 annually on an elderly prisoner, per the report.

Being in prison also leads to a faster decline in health: Studies have shown that 40 percent of incarcerated older people are diagnosed with cognitive impairments, while it's about 20 percent for those 65 and older who are not in prison.

"We need to take a hard look at what punishment and redemption really mean in our country," said Elizabeth Gaynes, president and CEO of the Osborne Association, in a statement. "After spending decades behind bars, what is the value of continuing to imprison someone who has transformed and reformed or can barely walk or no longer remember why he or she is there?"

The report recommends that New York prisons train their staff to recognize and address age-related issues, like hearing loss or cognitive decline; retrofit prisons to make them more age-friendly; expand the use of parole to release more elderly prisoners and to help these prisoners re-enter society by connecting them with geriatric care, public benefits and reaching out to next of kin.

"The need to keep the aged in prison makes less and less sense," said Brian Fischer, former Commissioner of the New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, in a statement. "Combining early release with appropriate community placement assistance for this population can provide New York with an opportunity to address long-overdue criminal justice reform in a cost-effective and meaningful way."

NYC plans to raise parking meter rates by end of 2018

If you drive in New York City, prepare to pay more for parking by the end of the year.

The city's Department of Transportation proposed on Wednesday a plan to raise meter rates in order to hopefully allow for parking spots to turn over more quickly.

"New York City's parking rates are low compared to other large U.S. or global cities," Polly Trottenberg, commissioner of the New York City Department of Transportation, said during a testimony on the preliminary budget at a hearing before the City Council on Wednesday.

Cities around the country have been updating their parking meter systems; Boston conducted a pilot program that raised meters to $4 an hour on busy streets, and San Francisco announced in December it would adjust meter prices by demand, in some cases up to $8 an hour.

About 60 percent of the city's 14,500 parking meters are set at $1 an hour, and some of those are in highly congested areas, like Downtown Brooklyn, while others are in less dense spots, like East New York, noted Trottenberg.

Raising rates in commercial areas that see more congestion could help promote turnover, she said.

The Department of Transportation plans to raise the price of parking meters in New York City by the end of the year. GETTY IMAGES

The department plans to raise rates by zones, depending on demand. The system of three rate zones will be expanded "into a system of more zones to more closely match land use and parking demand in both Manhattan and the outer boroughs," according to Trottenberg.

The DOT plans to begin these rate changes later this year.

Trottenberg also touched on other items in the DOT's budget, like a commitment by the department to assess more than 300,000 pedestrian ramp locations and upgrade or install new ramps as needed; the funding of several Vision Zero street reconstruction projects and the creation of an Authorized Parking Application website to better issue parking permits.

Lawyer: Pregnant mom who lost toddler in Park Slope crash loses unborn child Ruthie Ann Blumenstein, who lost her 4-year-old daughter Abigail when Dorothy Bruns ran a red light March 5, has lost her unborn daughter.

Ruthie Ann Blumenstein, the pregnant Brooklyn mother whose child was killed after being struck by a driver who ran a red light in Park Slope in March, has lost her unborn child, her family's lawyer told the New York Daily News Wednesday.

Blumenstein and her husband, Jonathan, were expecting a daughter this month.

"At the time of the crash, Ruthie was pregnant and was severely injured. This past Friday, Ruthie and Jonathan lost their baby, Sophia Rosemary Wong Blumenstein," Ben Rubinowitz told the Daily News. "The pain suffered by Ruthie and Jonathan is nearly impossible to fathom."

Blumenstein, a Tony-winning Broadway actress whose stage name is Ruthie Ann Miles, was in the intersection of Ninth Street and Fifth Avenue in Park Slope with her friend Lauren Lew on March 5 when Dorothy Bruns ran the red light and struck the two women, their two small children and a male pedestrian.

Blumenstein's 4-year-old daughter, Abigail, and Lew's 1-year-old son, Joshua, were killed, and Blumenstein was seriously injured.

Bruns, 44, attempted to flee after the incident, dragging Joshua Lew's stroller down Ninth Street until she crashed into several cars and was detained by witnesses.

The Staten Island resident told emergency responders after the crash that she had suffered a seizure, which caused her to accelerate through the red light. Evidence cited by Brooklyn District Attorney Eric Gonzalez earlier this month showed that Bruns suffered two other seizures immediately after the crash.

Gonzalez said Bruns was ordered not to drive for one year after she was hospitalized when she crashed into a parked car less than two months before the Park Slope incident.

Additionally, Bruns' license plate had been cited 12 times in the past two years for traffic violations that included four instances of running red lights and four for speeding in school zones.

Bruns was charged earlier this month with second-degree manslaughter, criminally negligent homicide, reckless endangerment, third-degree assault and related charges. She faces up to 15 years in prison if convicted.

According to state laws regarding homicide, Bruns will not face additional charges now that Blumenstein has lost her unborn daughter.

Trump fails to halt defamation lawsuit from contestant on 'The Apprentice'

A New York state appeals court on Thursday denied U.S. President Donald Trump's bid to halt a defamation lawsuit by a former contestant on his reality TV show "The Apprentice" who accused him of making unwanted sexual advances.

In a one-page order, the Appellate Division in Manhattan did not explain why it refused to stay the lawsuit by Summer Zervos while the president appeals a March 20 lower-court ruling that allowed the California restaurateur to pursue her case.

The White House was not immediately available for comment.

Trump is appealing a ruling by Justice Jennifer Schecter of the State Supreme Court in Manhattan, which rejected his claim that as president he was immune to lawsuits over private conduct predating his entering the White House.

Zervos, an "Apprentice" contestant in 2005, accused Trump of kissing her against her

"We look forward to proving Ms. Zervos' claim that defendant lied when he maliciously attacked her for reporting his sexually abusive behavior."

Cuti Hecker Wang law firm, in a statement will at a 2007 meeting in New York and later groping her at a Beverly Hills hotel.

She came forward in October 2016, a month before the presidential election, following the release of a 2005 "Access Hollywood" recording in which Trump spoke in vulgar terms about women.

While Trump apologized for his comments, he said repeatedly during his campaign that all accusations made by women after the "Access Hollywood" recording became public were "lies." He also republished on Twitter a post calling Zervos' claims a hoax.

Zervos has said those denials amounted to defamation and that diners avoided her restaurant after she was branded a liar.

"We look forward to proving Ms. Zervos' claim that defendant lied when he maliciously attacked her for reporting his sexually abusive behavior," Zervos' law firm, Cuti Hecker Wang, said in a statement Thursday.

Several women have accused Trump of improper sexual conduct or said he had affairs with them.

Stormy Daniels, a pornographic-film actress whose real name is Stephanie Clifford, is seeking to end an agreement in which Trump's personal lawyer Michael Cohen paid her $130,000 not to discuss her alleged affair with Trump. REUTERS

FOREMAN FORECAST: JUST GETTING STARTED

TOM FOREMAN

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

As the Russia investigation hit its first anniversary this week, President Trump was raging away — tweeting, "Congratulations America, we are now into the second year of the greatest Witch Hunt in American History ... still No Collusion and No Obstruction." Now, it seems to me that Salem, Massachusetts, still holds the title for "greatest" when it comes to witch hunts because, you know, they were actually hunting witches. But let's put that (and his oddball use of capital letters) aside to address the general claims that this sleuthing has A) gone on too long and B) produced no evidence of wrongdoing.

As special investigations go, Robert Mueller's is just a baby. Or maybe a teenager. Numerous other probes have lasted much, much longer: Clinton/

Whitewater, Iran/Contra, Valerie Plame/NSA ... even the Bruce Babbitt investigation, for crying out loud. An online analysis found the average length of such endeavors is just over 900 days. Based on that formula, Team Trump ought not to expect a wrap-up until early November 2019 — one year before the next presidential election. Imagine how thrilled that timing would make them.

But what about this question of results? In one year, this probe has produced 75 criminal charges for 22 people and/or companies, five guilty pleas have been recorded, and one person has been sentenced. I'm not a judge, but that sounds substantial.

I'll grant that the president has reason to be frustrated. After all, he is correct when he says we have yet to see any proof of collusion between his campaign and the Russians. He's also right to say no evidence we know of has legally established a case for obstruction of justice. And certainly no one has pinned anything directly to him on those fronts, despite some questionable accounting when it comes to porn stars he has known.

So sure, if I were Donald Trump, I might be angry too. I too might send my minions out to howl about the length, breadth and intent of the investigation.

But again, it's still early. And as much as the president may despise the fact that this has gone on for a year, as long as it is producing results, there will likely be no end in sight.

Why one group wants to carve Trump's face into a glacier and watch it melt Taking activist street art to sea level, a Finnish group aims to raise $500,000 so they can carve President Trump's face into a glacier and livestream it melting. The project lends several metaphors to an administration that can't be accused of being poetic: It's partly a take off on Trump's reported desire to be carved into Mount Rushmore, said Nicolas Prieto, leader of Project Trumpmore.

It's also a statement on Trump's climate-change denialism. "One of the biggest reasons we picked Trump is his pulling back from the Paris climate agreement," said Prieto in the New York Daily News on Wednesday.

Last summer Trump withdrew the U.S. from the global accord, leaving the U.S. and Nicaragua as the only countries in the world that rejected

It isn't clear where Project Trumpmore will be built, if it is. The sculpture is intended to be 120 to 150 feet tall before it begins melting. The group is still setting up crowdfunding pages but is open to a single sponsor, the Daily News said.

The group wants the whole world to see the process of climate change as it happens, said Prieto. They did a test run with a 10-foot-tall Trump ice sculpture last month.

I read Philadelphia Metro Monday thru Friday at work. Love the manspreader article. I had one of them 2 weeks ago on a crowded train going home. I was sitting next to him. What is that all about? I had to laugh reading your article, love it. I think 2 things here, some may be packing and others insecurity. Love this new section of Metro, keeping them coming. Thank you for reading and have a great day.

Hey pal, You're right about men widening their space between their legs. I sometimes do it even when I don't mean to. When I realize myself then I correct it and close it up. I will remember to keep it close from now on wherever I am and be courteous to my fellow New Yorker. Thank you for your concern, readers!

I'll make a deal with you, when you stop using up 3 spaces for baby carriages I'll agonizingly

Aries Keep your emotions in check. Someone may disappoint you, but don't make a fuss that will ruin your day and perhaps the relationship. Choose peace over discord.

Taurus Dealing with situations involving parents, siblings and people you feel responsible for will bring satisfying results. A little charm will open up opportunities out of reach in the past.

Gemini Check your motives before undertaking something questionable. Doing something for someone out of love can be costly. Know what you are getting into before committing.

Cancer Emotional situations are best dealt with before you give someone the wrong impression. Say what's on your mind and make your intentions clear. Be willing to compromise.

Leo Don't feel you must follow the crowd. It's fine if someone else wants to be indulgent or extravagant, but trying to keep up is foolish. Only do what you can afford.

Virgo Social media can be used to get what you want. Altering your game plan at the last minute will keep others guessing and promote greater interest in what you have to offer.

Libra Put more energy into getting what you want at home and in important relationships. Listen attentively and offer incentives and suggestions that will entice those you deal with to compromise.

Scorpio Let your creative imagination take control. The ideas and suggestions you offer will be well received by someone who will make a great personal or professional partner

Sagittarius Be careful what kind of information you share. Personal documents, passwords or anything that could leave you in a compromising position should be kept secret. Deception is apparent.

Capricorn Spend more time with a loved one. You can make changes that will help bring you closer together and satisfy everyone's needs. Talk followed by action is encouraged.

Aquarius Book some time at your local spa or buy tickets to an event that will take your mind off your troubles. A little downtime or romantic adventure will do you good.

Pisces A gift or financial gain looks promising. Don't be foolish or let someone talk you into spending money on something you don't need. A penny saved is a penny earned. EUGENIA LAST audience, but with the elements that revolve around him and that admire about Deadpool's personality?

I like that he is a free character and always says what he thinks without stopping himself. For example, there is a phrase that I like about him, which is: "Wherever hell is, that zone belongs to me." I like him a lot because he has very funny, but also has obscure parts.

wants to express what happened because we could hurt her family. I admire her a lot because she was one of the pioneer women in motorcycling, and we will do whatever is necessary to respect her legacy. Part of it is to be discreet and do it as humanly as possible.

Who is your favorite Marvel character?

I like each one of the Marvel characters. I really like all the Avengers, but I think Black Panther is one of my favorites. I also loved the last Thor.

Which character have you enjoyed most, Green Lantern or Deadpool?

Definitely Deadpool. The two have their charm, but I think Deadpool has certainly been a truly wonderful experience and I am very grateful for the privilege of putting on this character's costume.

Did you choose the movie's playlist?

Of course! No, not the whole playlist really, but some songs I did. I really like music from the '80s and I think that is reflected in the movies.

The Canadian actor talks with Metro about what it means for him to be film's most popular antihero with "Deadpool 2."

PATRICIA CARRANZA MWN

After 25 years in the film industry, Ryan Reynolds tells Metro that playing Deadpool has been the greatest privilege of his career, allowing him to be authentic and break the fourth wall between him and the audience. But he admits that, at first, he wasn't sure the project would be successful.

"The first time I dressed like Deadpool I had a lot of doubts about the impact it would have on people," Reynolds says. "I was not sure if the story would connect. I really felt stupid and I remember telling my wife: 'I'll be using a giant red wet condom as a bodysuit the entire movie,' and she replied, 'Do it and suck it up.'"

But his doubts disappeared when he saw the success of the first installment, which managed to raise $783 million worldwide. He hopes the sequel, which hits theaters this weekend, will also be well received by audiences.

How has your life changed since playing a character like Deadpool?

It really has been a very pleasant experience, although at first I doubted a bit about Deadpool's connection with the audience, but in the end, I realized that it was the best decision I could have made. It may sound like a cliché, but my dreams were fulfilled by being part of this story, and I am very excited.

What has been your biggest challenge with playing Deadpool?

Deadpool's essence is to be authentic because he is like a child and spectators can see that. Without that authenticity, there is no story. It seems to me that the main challenge is to show people that Deadpool is authentic in his way of being, not only with the cannot be seen in any other film, and as an actor, it is complicated.

Deadpool tries to start a superhero team in "Deadpool 2." 20TH CENTURY FOX

Survival of the funniest

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

"Deadpool 2" somehow achieves the seemingly impossible, making even more outrageous, zanier and cruder jokes than its original.

As the Merc with the Mouth, Ryan Reynolds has rightfully been lauded for his comedic skills and charm that made the foul-mouthed antihero a massive (and massively surprising) box office smash for 20th Century Fox. And while the actor "definitely had a direction" for the sequel, according to director David Leitch, bringing it to the screen was a team effort.

Leitch, who replaced Tim Miller on the sequel out May 18, reveals that Reynolds collaborated with him and screenwriters Rhett Reese and Paul Wernick to form a creative foursome that helped push "Deadpool 2" to new heights.

Leitch describes himself as "the general" of the group who handled the day-to-day logistics because of his "background in taking a movie from A to B and in physical production." But when it came to making a scene better, "it was really the best idea wins."

"There weren't any egos between us, which is hard in this situation. But everyone just wanted what was best for the movie."

"We all had to just look each in the eye and do a gut check."

"The expectations for 'Deadpool 2' are huge, and we had to rely on each other and not turn this into a battle of creative [minds] and just support each other and get the best movie."

er and get the best movie."

In the sequel, Deadpool really gets into the superhero game on a mission to save the tempestuous young mutant Russell/Firefist (Julian Dennison) from the time-traveling cybernetic soldier Cable played by Josh Brolin, who's had a very busy summer.

Fresh off of wreaking havoc as Thanos in "Avengers: Infinity War" at the end of April, the Academy Award-nominated actor was a very late addition to the film.

"Josh did come in quite late," says Leitch. "There was a short list of people. It was just the way that things came about. We were down the road with some people. It was sort of a turn around, and it happened at the last second."

Ahead of production, there were three key components of "Deadpool" that Leitch wanted to expand upon. "You have the irreverent comedy that is undeniable. A real emotional beating heart to the film, that is unexpected in a comic book movie. And then you have some bad-ass action," he says. "I wanted to try and build on all of that and stay true to the original, but then give it my own imprint as a director."

Leitch also reveled in the marketing opportunities for "Deadpool 2" because of what they could do with the character.

"It is hard to separate Deadpool the character from 'Deadpool' the franchise and brand. You actually have moments where you can reach beyond the screen and tickle the audience before the movie starts."

The team, including Reynolds, got to collaborate on the marketing campaign, which featured everything from Deadpool leaning back in a chair under a rain of bullets "Flashdance"-style to a music video with Celine Dion.

"[That] was an idea that stemmed from the movie," he says. "It is really fun with this universe that it expands beyond the film itself."

The fateful story of 'On Chesil Beach'

After "Atonement," Saoirse Ronan is once again the leading lady in an Ian McEwan adaptation.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Saoirse Ronan had been eyeing the leading role in Ian McEwan's romantic novel "On Chesil Beach" for quite some time before she was eventually cast.

Having shot to prominence with her Academy Award-nominated performance in 2007's "Atonement," which was also based on a novel by McEwan, the Irish actress clearly had a professional and personal affinity for the author. It was more than mutual.

"I remember the first time that Ian came to the set of 'Atonement,' everyone was so nervous, because it was the person who had created it all," Ronan tells Metro.

"Because I was so young that hadn't sunk in. So for me, I was like, 'Oh come on, it is only Ian. Come with me I will show you around the set.' We got along straight away. We clicked and stayed in touch for all of these years."

But when McEwan was developing "On Chesil Beach" with director Sam Mendes back in 2010, Ronan was just 16 years old, which was too young for the part of Florence. She's newly married to Edward, and the film primarily focuses on their honeymoon and the fact they are both terrified of consummating their marriage while simultaneously flashing back to reveal how they fell in love.

But the movie industry can work in mysterious ways. So while Mendes' decision to swap "On Chesil Beach" for the James Bond thriller "Skyfall" pushed it into a five-year period of development hell, it also gave Ronan time to grow into the character.

"I was the right age when it all came together," Ronan recalls, while the director's chair had passed to Dominic Cooke, who says she was the obvious choice.

"I instantly loved the script when I read it," Cooke says. "I quickly got on board, and around that time 'Brooklyn' had come out, and I thought it was a no-brainer that she should do it. Once she committed to doing it, things started to snowball quickly."

After "Brooklyn," Ronan was very much in demand, though. So much so that for one "very tricky week" she had to combine shooting "Lady Bird" in California and New York with rehearsing and filming "On Chesil Beach" across the pond.

"I was shooting 'Lady Bird'; I wrapped in Sacramento on the Saturday. Flew into London on the Monday morning. Went straight to the read-through. Did four days of rehearsals for 'On Chesil Beach.' Then on the Thursday flew back to New York. Friday morning at, like, 5 a.m. we started to shoot the ending of 'Lady Bird.' And then I flew back and started 'On Chesil Beach' on the Monday. So it was an insane week. It is tough. People do that all the time, and I don't know how they do it."

For Cooke, though, no one but Ronan would have sufficed for the film. "The thing about Saoirse is she has a great sense of storytelling but is still completely in all of the scenes and in the moment."

"She has a great sense of the story and what is important and the function of the scene. She's really adept at being able to tell the story and the character really well."

You can see Ronan doing just that when "On Chesil Beach" is released in theaters today.

The clock is ticking for Martin Freeman to save his daughter in "Cargo." NETFLIX

A different kind of zombie film

Martin Freeman describes his new horror film "Cargo" as dangerous, visceral and very human.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Released at the height of the zombie fandom, it didn't take long for the Australian short film "Cargo" to go viral back in 2013. But moviegoers didn't turn out in droves because it was particularly gory or violent — instead, they connected with its ingenious approach and emotion.

That's exactly what persuaded Martin Freeman to join the feature-length version of "Cargo" when he was approached by the directing team of Ben Howling and Yolanda Ramke. He was immediately impressed with the short film and saw the script had rich potential for turning it into a feature-length movie.

"The short [film] was the culmination; the script was the whole background," he says. "It felt visceral. It felt human. It felt dangerous. It is shot in a way that other films might be shot that weren't about zombies."

In "Cargo," Freeman plays an infected father desperately on the search for a new home for his infant daughter. He has only 48 hours before he turns, so he carries 1-year-old Rosie across the Australian Outback in search of survivors.

Freeman wasn't really interested in the zombie aspect of the film, though. Instead, he just trusted the directors would make them realistic.

"We had a very good movement coach, who made it specific and broke it down into stages," he explains about the cast's zombie training. "I found them quite disturbing, really. Because when they went into their thing, some of them would be bent over in a sort of 'Exorcist' way. They were almost at a right angle. It just looked like this person was ill. Really, really ill. It was upsetting."

Mostly, though, Freeman focused on the father/daughter dynamic of the film, which was what attracted him to "Cargo." Working with the two sets of twins who portrayed Rosie wasn't his biggest challenge, though.

"The heat was interesting," he says diplomatically. "It was fine, actually. I like heat. But the testing stuff was the flies and the mosquitoes. The mosquitoes were a problem in one particular location that we had to visit a number of times. Because it was basically a swamp, and I just got eaten alive."

At least that aided Freeman's grungy performance, which you can see when "Cargo" is released on Netflix on Friday.

3 horses that could upset Justify at 2018 Preakness

Justify will look to take the second jewel of the Triple Crown, but he'll have some solid horses to beat.

ROBERT CRISCOLA
sports@metro.us

The 143rd Preakness Stakes takes place this Saturday at Pimlico Racecourse in Baltimore, MD (6:30 p.m., NBC). Kentucky Derby winner Justify, who drew post seven once more and retains jockey Mike Smith, will try to become the fifth Bob Baffert trainee to take the first two legs of the Triple Crown before heading to the Belmont Stakes. And while Justify was made a heavy 1-2 morning-line favorite against seven others, there's no such thing as a sure thing in horse racing.

Here are three underdogs to consider in this year's Preakness:

NO. 5 GOOD MAGIC (3-1)

The Kentucky Derby runner-up and Blue Grass Stakes winner seems like the sensible choice if one had to predict an upset. However, Justify beat him by a comfortable 2 1/2-length margin in "the Run for the Roses." Good Magic wasn't gaining on him in the stretch either; in fact, he almost lost second to Audible. Still, the distance reduction from 1 1/4 miles to 1 3/16ths miles could play in Good Magic's favor, and he has elite connections behind him in trainer Chad Brown, who won last year's Preakness with Cloud Computing, and jockey Jose Ortiz, last year's Eclipse Award-winning rider.

NO. 1 QUIP (12-1)

Quip bypassed the Kentucky Derby in order to train up to the $1.5 million Preakness Stakes. He'll be making his third start of 2018; he was first in the Tampa Bay Derby two starts ago before settling for second in the Arkansas Derby when last seen. Quip is fast enough to compete with these based on speed figures, but he drew a tricky post for his preferred pace-stalking style. Florent Geroux, recognized for riding Horse of the Year Gun Runner but yet to record a Triple Crown series win, has the call for little-known Midwest-based conditioner Rodolphe Brisset. Quip is one of several who have never raced on a muddy track before, which is important to note as the forecast calls for significant rainfall at Pimlico leading up to post time.

NO. 8 BRAVAZO (20-1)

Bravazo spotted Justify plenty of ground in the Kentucky Derby, going five-wide on both turns. Jockey Luis Contreras asked Bravazo to run early on the far turn and his mount responded decently before flattening out late. He's another colt that shouldn't mind turning back a 1/16th of a mile. Bravazo is trained by the esteemed D. Wayne Lukas, who also sends out Sporting Chance and has won the Preakness six times, and will be ridden by Luis Saez, who seeks his first Triple Crown series win. Lukas was unclear what the strategy would be with Bravazo, who typically shows speed but raced 11th early on in the Derby.

"Not everybody can be just off the pace," he told reporters before Wednesday's post draw. "I think we're probably as quick as most of them, so we'll have to use a little judgment on the rider part."

Justify up for 2nd jewel in Triple Crown

35 horses have won the first two legs of the Triple Crown.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

One leg down, two more to go for Justify in his quest to become the 13th horse to win the Triple Crown of thoroughbred racing in the United States.

With all the hype surrounding the horse entering the 2018 Kentucky Derby, with three wins in three career starts, Justify showed that he was worth all that anticipation, putting up blistering times despite wet, sloppy conditions at Churchill Downs.

The shorter, 1 3/16-mile track at Pimlico Raceway tailors perfectly to Justify, who enters this Saturday's Preakness Stakes as the overwhelming favorite. This is a horse who is not just a pacesetter, but a pace presser, an impressive thoroughbred that can take an early lead and take it to another level when stalkers and closers try to make late moves. Given his first four races, it wouldn't be a shock if he pulled off a gate-to-wire victory.

Regardless of how he could possibly win, a victory at the Preakness would put Justify in esteemed company as the 36th horse to win the first two legs of the Triple Crown. Given that this will be the 100th complete running of the Triple Crown, that's a significant portion of horses that have won two of the first three legs.

But getting that third jewel is much more difficult — only 12 horses have won all three races, the last one being the Belmont Stakes.

Here is a list of the 23 horses that have won both the Kentucky Derby and Preakness Stakes, but weren't able to finish off the Triple Crown:
